

Allianz Group
Modern Slavery Act
Statement for FY 2025

Foreword

This Modern Slavery Act Statement¹ describes Allianz Group's approach to fighting modern slavery, in line with the 2015 UK Modern Slavery Act. The statement covers the financial year ending December 31st 2025 and applies to all Allianz entities worldwide over which Allianz SE (the holding company of Allianz Group) exerts decisive influence, including those entities that are directly in scope of the UK Modern Slavery Act, namely:

- Allianz Holdings plc
- AWP Assistance UK Limited
- AWP P&C S.A. - UK Branch
- Allianz Global Investors UK Limited

Allianz Group's approach to modern slavery is part of our overall commitment to, and due diligence for, human rights and labor standards. For our own operations and supply chain, this approach is based on the comprehensive legal requirements of the 2021 German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act, while for relevant parts of our insurance and investments business, it is based on the U.N. Guiding Principles for Business and Human Rights. Since due diligence for all forms of modern slavery is integrated into our overall human rights due diligence, this statement focuses on specific aspects and needs to be read together with other disclosures. Our overall approach to human rights is described in the 'Allianz SE Human Rights Policy Statement' for own operations and supply chains and the 'Allianz Sustainability Integration Framework' for relevant business transactions, as well as other relevant documents. Our human rights due diligence is also included in our Sustainability Statement, which as part of our Annual Report, is subject to an audit to reasonable assurance level.

1 About Allianz

Allianz is one of the world's leading insurers and asset managers, with 96 million customers, including 78 million retail customers, in almost 70 countries.² In 2025, Allianz employed over 154,000 people around the world.³ Allianz SE, the parent company, is headquartered in Munich, Germany, while Allianz Group has entities in over 50 countries around the world.

➔ For further information, please see the Allianz Annual Report on our corporate website Allianz.com

Allianz is a financial service provider that offers insurance and asset management products under a highly regulated legal framework. We do not produce any goods in the traditional sense.

Generally, human rights risk associated with the own operations and supply chains of financial services providers is rather low, compared with producing industries. This conclusion is supported by our research using publicly available data on sectoral human rights risks, a comprehensive mapping of our global supplier base to sectoral indices as well as the outcomes of our risk assessments. The following pages provide details on our concrete human rights risk analyses and other due diligence measures.

² Customer count reflects Allianz customers in consolidated entities that are part of the customer reporting scope only. Retail customers of pure asset management subsidiaries are excluded.

³ Employees in Allianz's subsidiaries which fully report under the global People and Culture metrics definition handbook (incl. all insurance and asset management business).

2 Our commitment to human rights

At Allianz, we recognize the importance of human rights as both a value-based topic and a business issue. Allianz is committed to

- supporting and respecting the protection of international human rights
- ensuring that Allianz is not complicit in human rights abuses.

As part of this commitment, we at Allianz aim to ensure that risks to the human rights of people working for Allianz, for our suppliers and those whose human rights may otherwise be directly affected by the economic activities of Allianz or its suppliers are minimized and that violations are addressed promptly and adequately.

This commitment is in line with the legal obligations stemming from the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Chain Act (GSCA)⁴ for Allianz SE (as the parent company of Allianz Group).

GSCA applies not only to Allianz in Germany, but the own operations and supply chains of all relevant Allianz entities worldwide. GSCA requires companies to comply with wide-ranging due diligence obligations to minimize the risk of negative human rights impacts in their own operations and supply chains.

Sec. 2 GSCA specifies the protected legal positions on which this due diligence must be applied. It covers core labor standards, such as equal treatment, occupational health and safety and freedom of associations and notably also includes

- the prohibition of the employment of a child under the age at which compulsory schooling ends according to the law of the place of employment, provided that the age of employment is not less than 15 years (in line with ILO Convention No. 138)
- the prohibition of the worst forms of child labor for children under 18 years of age, which includes all forms of slavery, child prostitution, illicit activities, and work which, by its nature, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children (in line with ILO Convention No. 182)
- the prohibition of the employment of persons in forced labor (in line with ILO Convention No. 29 and Article 8 (3) (b) and (c) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights)
- the prohibition of all forms of slavery, practices akin to slavery, serfdom or other forms of domination or oppression in the workplace, such as extreme economic or sexual exploitation and humiliation.

3 Our Allianz human rights due diligence processes

Our due diligence approach

Our approach is guided by the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises and the U.N. Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and designed to ensure compliance with the German Supply Chain Act (GSCA)⁵.

Due diligence in own operations and supply chains

The Allianz human rights risk management in own operations and supply chains is in line with the requirements of the GSCA. It is designed to identify, assess and minimize risks to, and address violations of, human rights, including the prohibition of modern slavery.

At Allianz, the risk management framework consists of the following due diligence processes:

- regular (at least annual) and ad-hoc risk analyses in own operations and the direct supplier base, the results of which are communicated to all relevant decision-makers
- ad-hoc risk analyses of indirect suppliers if Allianz obtains substantiated knowledge of human rights violation at that company
- appropriate preventive / remedial measures for risks / violations identified in own operations and supply chains; the effectiveness of such measures is reviewed at least annually
- a worldwide (anonymous) complaints mechanism that is accessible to Allianz employees, the employees of Allianz suppliers and anyone who may be affected by the economic activities of Allianz or its suppliers
- a policy statement on our human rights strategy published on our corporate website Allianz.com
- monitoring of the risk management through the function of a human rights officer, who

reports to the Board of Management at least annually

- ongoing documentation of all due diligence efforts
- public reporting on human rights due diligence through our CSRD-based Sustainability Statement

Dedicated human rights experts in our Global Sustainability function coordinate the implementation of human rights due diligence worldwide, whilst working closely with all relevant functions at Group level and our entities worldwide. Experts in the People & Culture and Procurement functions are trained in assessing human rights risks as well as defining, implementing and reviewing any measures that might be required to minimize human rights risk.

Due diligence in corporate insurance and investment management

For our commercial insurance and our proprietary investments, human rights due diligence processes are an integral part of our overall sustainability approach. We use a combination of sector- and country-specific approaches, as well as company-specific research to identify human rights risks, including risks related to modern slavery. Our due diligence processes for commercial insurance and proprietary investments are published in detail in the “Sustainability Integration Framework” as well as in our Sustainability Statement.

4 Preventive and remedial measures in own operations and supply chains

Measures in own operations

The obligation to respect human rights is part of the Allianz Group Code of Conduct. The Code of Conduct is designed to ensure responsible and ethical behavior within Allianz Group. All employees are expected to become familiar with the Code of Conduct and to apply these principles in their daily work.

Allianz has implemented a range of further measures to minimize risks to human rights, including any forms of modern slavery or exploitation, in our own operations. These include extensive policies to protect the safety, health and well-being of our employees as well as various anonymous surveys and feedback tools, alongside a strong commitment to transparency and accountability.

In case we learn of any suspected or actual violations of human rights in our own operations, for example through our complaints mechanism, we will take immediate action to prevent such violation or minimize its impact.

We assess the effectiveness of preventive and remedial measures on a regular basis, at least once a year.

Measures in supply chains

At Allianz we encourage our suppliers to take responsibility for human rights in their own operations and supply chains, notably through implementing due diligence procedures in line with the U.N. Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises.

To minimize human rights and environmental risks in our supply chain, we have established the following measures:

- The Allianz Sustainable Procurement Charter sums up our sustainable procurement aspirations for Allianz, including our human rights approach. It provides guidance for both internal buyers and external suppliers. It strongly encourages all our suppliers to manage their own supply chains in line with the environmental, social and governance principles laid out in the Charter, to minimize risks further down in the Allianz supply chain (indirect suppliers).
- All (potential) suppliers that wish to participate in an Allianz tender and / or enter a contractual relationship with Allianz must accept the Allianz Vendor Code of Conduct or submit an equivalent Code of Conduct. Our Vendor Code of Conduct spells out our minimum expectations towards our suppliers regarding human rights and employment standards, including the prohibition of any forms of modern slavery.

- During the Allianz supplier onboarding, suppliers with whom we have larger order volumes must answer additional sustainability-related questions, including on their human rights due diligence processes. Suppliers that do not establish appropriate human rights due diligence in their operations and supply chains are subjected to an ad-hoc risk analysis.
- Suppliers that have been identified as potentially high risk can be asked to sign additional human rights-related contractual clauses.

If we find that human rights violations have occurred or are imminent at one of our suppliers, we take immediate remedial actions, in line with our ability to influence the respective supplier. We may enforce additional human rights-related contractual clauses or use other measures, depending on the type of violation. As a last resort, we will sever the business relationship with a supplier that persistently violates human rights.

5 Results of our human rights risk assessments

The German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act (GSCA) requires Allianz to conduct annual and ad-hoc assessments for human rights risks in own operations and supply chains.

Risk assessment in own operations

The risk of modern slavery occurring in the own operations of an insurance and asset management companies was a priori assessed to be “low”. Nevertheless, the experts tasked with conducting regular local risk assessments in Allianz own operations have been trained in identifying all risks to protected positions listed in Sec. 2 GSCA, including child labor, the worst forms of child labor, forced labor and slavery.

So far, no substantive risks relating child labor, the worst forms of child labor, forced labor or slavery have been identified in any Allianz entity and no violations have been reported.

Risk assessment in supply chains

For the annual risk analysis in Allianz supply chains, the central procurement function has compiled information on all direct suppliers of all Allianz entities worldwide to which GSCA applies.

In line with a risk-based approach, we use abstract risk filters for country and sector risk, as well as a materiality filter. Like this, we identify a limited number of potential high-risk suppliers out of the total population of direct suppliers. We subject potentially high-risk suppliers to a concrete risk assessment, using publicly available and specialized ESG risk data, adverse media screening desktop research and supplier questionnaires, which – where adequate – could also cover child labor, the worst forms of child labor, forced labor and slavery.

So far, we have not identified any violations of the prohibition of child labor, the worst forms of child labor, forced labor or slavery in our supplier base.

- ➔ Our assessments have shown that generally, risks to human rights and labor standards in our supply chains is low, which relates to our extensive preventive measures as well as the nature of our supply chain, which consists predominantly of service providers, such as IT, legal or consulting services. 6 Continuous improvement

At Allianz, we strive to continuously improve our human rights due diligence processes, including through monitoring by our Allianz Group Human Rights Officer.

All colleagues engaged in human rights due diligence receive regular training on the foundational protected principles, including modern slavery, as well as the associated due diligence processes.

Additionally, all Allianz employees are provided with training and support to embody the principles outlined in our Group Code of Conduct, which explicitly requires them to uphold and respect human rights in their roles at Allianz.
