OUR OWN BUSINESS

In 2008, Red Bull GmbH (the parent company of the Red Bull Technology Group) implemented its Global Code of Business Conduct (the 'Code') across the Red Bull Group. The objective of the Code is to ensure that the Red Bull Group operate ethically and in compliance with applicable labour laws, rules and regulations. Our policies and the Code are regularly reviewed and our employees are trained to ensure that the Code is implemented across the business. Red Bull is committed to maintaining appropriate safeguards against the mistreatment of persons within its business and supply chain. The Red Bull Technology Group Anti-Slavery Policy is embedded in our Employee Handbook to ensure our staff are aware of modern slavery issues, how to identify any such issues and the correct procedure to report any concerns an employee may have.

OUR SUPPLY CHAINS

The Red Bull Technology Group strictly prohibit the use of slavery or human trafficking in our supply chain. The Red Bull Technology Group's standard purchasing terms and conditions place obligations upon our suppliers to comply with the Modern Slavery Act 2015. The Red Bull Technology Group have specifically reserved the right to terminate any of our supply agreements in the event any such supplier is found to be in breach of its obligations under the Modern Slavery Act 2015. The Red Bull Technology Group assesses suppliers on a case-by-case basis to identify any risks in relation to forced labour, slavery and human trafficking. In accordance with Government guidance, we assess our new suppliers in a proportionate manner according to the level of risk associated with the relevant supplier and its products.
